

The 17 Most Anticipated Restaurant Openings in America This Fall

Plan your travel accordingly.

By JEREMY REPANICH

Hav & Mar

While the pandemic took a heavy toll on New York City, where its service sector jobs have been slower to recover than other major US metropolitan areas, the energy should return to the Big Apple this fall. As more people head back to the offices of Midtown and tourists return to see the city lit up this holiday season, the restaurant scene looks poised to reignite as well. When surveying the landscape of American dining there are exciting eateries ready to debut across the country—and that's especially true in New York City. When you check out our picks for the most anticipated restaurant openings of the fall below, you'll notice there are quite a few of the selections in the Empire State. But there are plenty of new dining options to entice us all around America.

Hav & Mar, New York City

The team behind Hav & Mar

Unfortunately, the pandemic made it so Rose Noël did get a ton of time to show off her skills when she opened Danny Meyer's first DC spot in January 2020. At the Italian-focused seafood restaurant Maialino Mare, she still impressed with dishes like Blue Crab Meatballs, so it's exciting to see her get ready to take the reins again. This time she's pairing with another titan, Marcus Samuelsson, to open another seafood-focused restaurant, but with decidedly different cultural influences. Hav & Mar will draw on Samuelsson's Scandinavian and Ethiopian roots along with nods to modern Black cuisine.